BRUZER LESS LETHAL LAUNCHER

By Jerry Cannon

There is a real need for less-lethal devices in law enforcement and corrections. A product that has jumped to the head of the line in less-lethal devices is the 12-gauge Bruzer Less Lethal Launcher.

The Bruzer is designed for existing 12-gauge less-lethal munitions already on the market, including kinetic-energy impact, chemical, signaling, animal control and muzzle blast munitions. You can probably already find these in your department's ammunition locker or from a variety of manufacturers. By adapting to each ammo type, the Bruzer can be ready for any mission that arises.

DERRINGER COMPLIANCE: The Bruzer looks like a big derringer, and it operates just as simply. The upper and lower components of the Bruzer are made of a lightweight, high-grade polymer. The twin over-and-under barrels are made of stainless steel. The Bruzer is available as either all-black or with a bright-orange upper barrel assembly. This option gives officers a simple but effective method of recognizing the device as intended for only less-lethal situations. I prefer and recommend the bright orange upper, and many officers have already been trained to recognize police shotguns that are marked in orange for the same reason.

The Bruzer is roughly the size of a full-size duty weapon and is therefore accessible in the same manner. As with any modern firearm, the Bruzer has an accessory rail and will accept any of the standard lights or laser units. Bruzer also makes a holster for the device that can be mounted to a tactical vest. One version of the holster has the capability to carry additional ready munitions on the outside.
